

Cleared For Takeoff

Real tasks from your real week, at home and at work

— THE FLIGHT PATTERN (EVERY TASK USES IT)

BRIEF → DRAFT → STEER → VERIFY → DECIDE

Brief it with the four flight controls (or let it interview you). Read the draft. Steer it until it's close. Verify anything factual. Then you decide: send, sign, book, or bin. The first three steps are the crew's legwork. The last two are yours, always.

— SIX PATHS: PICK THE THREE THAT MATCH YOUR WEEK

A · Writing: the emails, letters, complaints and replies you've been putting off.

B · Summarising: long documents, contracts, notes and threads made short.

C · Planning: trips, events, projects and family logistics, with options, not one plan.

D · Research: weighing decisions and purchases, with verification built in.

E · Health info: plain-English explanations and prepared questions, used calmly.

F · Money and admin: budgets, comparisons and official letters, guardrails on.

Pick the three paths that match your actual week. Capability comes from repetition, not coverage.

— KEEP YOURSELF HONEST

The rule of two. Any fact you're going to act on gets confirmed in one independent place, ideally the official source.

A summary is a map, not the territory. Read the clauses it flags, in the original, before you sign or repeat anything.

AI explains; doctors decide. Never use it for diagnosis, medication doses, or deciding whether to seek care.

Check the sums yourself. Maths is its known weak spot. The structure is its job; the arithmetic check is yours.

✈️ CLEARED TO TRY

Pick one task from any path, something already on your list this week, at home or at work. Run the flight pattern: brief, draft, steer, verify, decide. Notice what changed, and save the prompt if it earned it.
