

In The Air

One real project of your own, with AI as your working partner

— YOUR OUTCOME SENTENCE, AND THE FOUR TRACKS

| By [date], I will have [a tangible thing] that [who it's for / why it matters].

A project with an outcome sentence is real; one without is a mood. Pick something you care about, small enough to finish. One project at a time.

A · Write: memoir, family history, eulogy, speech. The crew edits; it never ghostwrites.

B · Start: a small business, group or newsletter. Purpose first; verify money and rules.

C · Sort: a retirement plan, reno, trip or estate. Turn the cloud into a list.

D · Learn: a language, instrument or skill, with AI as your patient tutor.

— THE SCOPE LOCK

Ask the crew: "Interview me about this project, then write a one-paragraph scope: exactly what's included, what's explicitly NOT included, and a realistic first milestone for this week."

When the project tries to grow (it will), point at the paragraph. New ideas go on a 'next project' list, not into this one.

— EVERY SESSION, THE SAME CYCLE

MAKE → CRITIQUE → DECIDE → LOG

Make the next step together. Then: "Read what we made as a sceptical editor. What's weak, unclear or missing?" You choose which criticisms matter. End every session by logging progress and the next step. Finishers use the crew to critique, not just create.

The ownership rule: the project speaks in your voice and ends in your name. 'I made it; I had good help' should stay a comfortable yes.

✈ CLEARED TO TRY

Spend two hours on your project this week. Not planning to spend, spending. Book the two hours like an appointment, run the cycle, and log your progress. One session makes you a person with a project.
