

Final Approach

Your weekly routine, your no-go list, and graduating in command

— YOUR ONE-PAGE PLAYBOOK

Your tool: one home base you open by default: Claude, ChatGPT, Gemini or Copilot.

Three anchor tasks: recurring jobs you now do with the crew, attached to days, not moods.

Five saved prompts: the library entries that run those tasks in thirty seconds.

Project session: one booked two-hour block. The project changes; the booking doesn't.

Safety lines: the postcard test, the rule of two, 'I'll call you back tomorrow'.

No-go list: three to five things AI will never touch in your life, with one line of why.

Quarterly date: thirty minutes every three months: still honest? Tools changed? Next project?

If your routine doesn't fit on one page, it won't survive February.

— THE HANGAR RULE

If the point of the task is that you did it, do it yourself. Condolences, love letters, the hard conversation, the hobby you love: imperfect and yours beats polished and borrowed. Choosing is mastery.

— PAY ONLY ON A RECEIPT

The free versions cover everything this course teaches. Pay only after the free version has earned a place in your week and bumps its limits twice in one month. Nothing 'secret' is for sale.

— TEACH ONE PERSON, PROPERLY

1. Sit beside them, their hands on the keyboard. You point; you never type.
2. One real win in twenty minutes: their actual put-off email, drafted and sent.
3. Do the safety setup together: official site, training off, safe word, postcard test.
4. When they ask 'what do I type?', wait. Captains make captains, not passengers.
5. Leave one page, not a manual: three messages to try, the never-share list, your number.

✈️ CLEARED TO TRY

Write your one-page playbook: your tool, three anchor tasks, five prompts, your project, your safety lines, your no-go list, your quarterly date. In your own words, somewhere you'll see it. That's graduation.
